25X1A9a 2. ASTD Presentation

[REDACTED] on 13 June attended a joint luncheon meeting of the American Society for Training and Development and the Training Officers Conference. The luncheon speaker was Geary Rummier, Director, The Center for Programmed Learning for Business, University of Michigan. Mr. Rummier's topic was "Training Is the Last Thing You Should Do." In essence his thesis was that very often competent individuals will have performance deficiencies and when this occurs the immediate thought is "He (they) need training or retraining," when actually the solution to the problem is possibly one of organization, management or supervision so that "training is the last thing you should do" -- after one has looked at all other possible solutions.

3. Brandon Course

The Brandon course on the systems development process was attended by forty-six employees of the Agency. The general feeling is that the course was excellent and will serve as a logical extension of our ADP orientation course. The per capita cost for this training was less than $70.00. The second offering of the Brandon course has been scheduled for 1-3 August 1967.
